Despite steady domestic prices, export prices declined by 1-2 percent due to the weakening Thai baht to 33.05 baht/$, as compared to 32.90 in the previous week. The January's enquiries have yet to be concluded as foreign buyers wait and see what the government's stock release plan will be, in light of its cancellation of the January 21 tender. The government is expected to gradually release intervention stock through a basis-bidding approach in the Agricultural Future Exchange of Thailand (AFET). However, export and domestic prices will likely remain volatile until new second-crop supplies enter the market in the next couple of weeks.

The bi-weekly benchmark prices for February 1-15 are lower than the previous period; as such farmers are receiving higher compensation for fragrant rice paddy. Meanwhile, farmers selling white rice paddy will also receive compensation as benchmark prices in this period were lower than insurance price, for the first time since December 15.
